2013 Resident Coordinator Annual Report (RCAR)

Introduction

The Georgian political landscape in 2013 was marked by a Presidential election in October which saw for the first time a presidential transition as the result of a peaceful, democratic election. The election ended the uneasy political co-habitation between the Government consisting of the “Georgian Dream” (GD) coalition and the President and majority of local authorities representing the previous ruling party United National Movement (UNM).

The October 2013 Presidential Elections were seen by international and local observers to be efficiently administered, transparent and took place in an amicable and constructive environment. Media coverage was overall less polarized and more balanced with greater diversity in coverage and sources of information. The election also marked the introduction of constitutional amendments passed three years ago which transferred key prerogatives from the president to the prime minister and effectively transformed the country to a parliamentary democracy.

Following the presidential inauguration, the Prime Minister Bidzina Ivanishvili kept his promise to leave politics and nominated 31 year old Minister of Interior Irakli Garibashvili as his successor, who was later endorsed by the Parliament. This nomination did not, however, result in a change of the current Government.

The Government retained its strong Euro-Atlantic orientation with EU Association Agreement and Deep and Comprehensive Free Trade Agreement (DCFTA) being initialed at the Vilnius Summit in November and intention to sign the Association Agreement as early as August 2014.

Protection of human rights and restoration of justice remained a topical issue for the Government and a major expectation for the public. The Government promised to de-politicize the justice sector, release those unfairly imprisoned and punish those responsible for abuse of power. These and other human rights related challenges were also pointed out in the report “Georgia in Transition” by Thomas Hammarberg, the EU Special Adviser on Constitutional and Legal Reform and Human Rights in Georgia, and encouraged the government to initiate development of a National Strategy and Action Plan for Human Rights.

The government, notwithstanding numerous challenges, has made a tangible progress in increasing independence of judiciary, liberalizing criminal procedures, reducing reliance the previously abused plea-bargaining procedures. More than 50% of the prisoners were released through a parliamentary amnesty and pardons granted by the President.

The Labour Code was thoroughly amended in consultations with ILO and other stakeholders and now better protects the rights of employees.

Political uncertainties matched with rigorous scrutiny of the previously approved public investment projects, thus suppressing government spending and reduced growth in the leading economies of the region caused economic slowdown. The IMF estimates 2.5%-3% annual GDP growth rate in 2013.
(6.2% in 2012). Inflation was -0.5%, with GEL depreciating towards the end of the year by 5.3%. Unemployment and poverty remain problematic with no significant improvements (unemployment: 15.1% in ’11 and 15.0% in ’12; relative poverty: 23% ’11 to 22.4%’12).

Economic slowdown was blamed for estimated budget deficit of Gel 900 mln and increased foreign debt (83.7% of III Qs GDP).

However, it should also be noted that the key sector of agriculture saw output increased by 11.5% in 2013 and tourism was also a fast growing sector of the Georgian economy accounting for an estimated 7.3% of the GDP and with a reported increase of 23% in international visitors during 2013. The World Bank estimates economic growth for Georgia of between 6 and 7% in 2014-2015. Other international financial institutions have published fairly similar forecasts.

The 2014 State Budget will maintain a social focus, with significant allocations for education, healthcare and social protection.

During 2013 the United Nations (UN) agencies, funds and programmes continued working in Abkhazia with the aim of improving living conditions and delivering durable solutions for displaced, vulnerable and conflict-affected communities. Delivery of such assistance included, where feasible, confidence building activities, and has been undertaken with the inclusion and direct participation of local communities. During 2013, the UN and INGO partners continued to address existing needs in identified priority sectors in Abkhazia, including housing, food production, health, education, social services and livelihoods support.

The increasing installation by Russian Border Guards of fences, observation towers, surveillance cameras and the presence of armed personnel adversely affected the livelihoods of local population by restricting access to agricultural lands, potable and irrigation water, pastures and other natural resources, and further restricted freedom of movement.

While UN continues working in Abkhazia, a lack of access by humanitarian and development agencies to South Ossetia continues to be of concern.
